

Global launch of World Population Prospects 2022, release of the latest China Population Prospects and symposium on low fertility

(As of 4th July 2022)

I. Background

In June 2019, the China Population and Development Research Center (CPDRC), together with the Population Division of the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs (UN DESA), held a press conference on occasion of the release of Population Prospects (WPP) 2019. The event, which provided information to the general public on global demographic trends, was widely covered by the media and very well received. This year, World Population Prospects 2022 will be released at the United Nations in New York on 11 July at 12 noon (eastern daylight time). Building on last year's successful cooperation, the CPDRC will convene an event together with the Population Division, in the morning of 12 July (Beijing time) to release the WPP 2022 results for the Chinese public. On the same occasion, the CPDRC and UNFPA China will launch the results of China Population Prospects, the latest population projections for China. The event will be followed by a symposium on low fertility and policy responses.
