

Report of E-Discussion

WOMEN AND POVERTY

Coordinated by the Gender Team
United Nations Development Programme, in collaboration with the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs

Summary

The E-discussion on Women and Poverty was organized by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the Department for Economic and Social Affairs (UNDESA) from 11 January to 12 February 2010 and cross posted on Gender-net, PR-Net and MDG-Net. The E-discussion generated 120 responses from practitioners, experts, and policymakers from 47 countries, and inspired 846 new members to join the dialogue. The E-discussion presented an opportunity for the broader development community to formulate critical policy messages and action agenda to the Commission on the Status on Women's 15 year review of the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action; ECOSOC Annual Ministerial Review on gender

I. Introduction and Purpose of the E-Discussion

As articulated in the invitation letter to the E-Discussion (see Annex 1), the purpose of the E-Discussion on Women and Poverty was “to bring together experts, practitioners and policy-makers, from within and outside of the UN system, to formulate critical policy messages to the 15-year review of the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action; the ECOSOC Annual Ministerial Review on gender equality (AMR); and the High-level Plenary Meeting of the sixty-fifth session of the General Assembly, focused on the Millennium Development Goals.”

The E-Discussion was a joint initiative of the UNDP Gender Team and the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs (UNDESA), moderated on gender-net by the UNDP Gender Team and cross posted on PR-Net and MDG-Net.

This report aims to provide a synthesis of the E-Discussion, includ leaders that were identified during the final session of the discussion, and that are summarized in Part IV below.

II. Structure and Organization of the E-Discussion

Regional Distribution of Contributions

In addition to the existing Gender-net, PR-net and MDG-net members, 846 new members registered to follow this E-Discussion. During the five-week discussion period, 120 contributions were received from 104 people. Postings were received from 47 countries, as shown in Table 1 below. In the case of three contributions, the country of origin was not stated or not possible to establish. More detailed information on participants is provided in Annex 3.

Structure of the E-Discussion

The E-Discussion was structured around three sessions, as follows:

Session 1 (January 11-February 4): New Insights on Women and Poverty

Session 2 (February 5-9): Institutional Responses to Women's Poverty

Session 3 (February 10-12): Core Messages, Actions, and Commitments

For logistical reasons, the sessions were of uneven duration, and response rates varied accordingly (Table 2).

As initially conceived, the E-Discussion aimed to address the following topics:

Table 2: Contributions by Session

Session	Number of
---------	-----------

§ New Understandings of Women and Poverty.

What are the new understandings of poverty and its gender dimensions that have evolved since the adoption of the Beijing Platform for Action? What are good practices in gender-responsive poverty analysis and poverty reduction activities?

§ Strengthening Institutional Responses.

How can the institutional and policy environment for addressing the gender dimensions of poverty be strengthened, building on the Beijing Platform for Action and the Millennium Declaration? How can national poverty reduction strategies and programmes as well as international support more effectively address the gender dimensions of poverty in the build-up to 2015?

§ Key Messages and Commitments for Leaders. What are the core policy messages for leaders participating in the 2010 CSW, ECOSOC, and the High-level Plenary Meeting on MDGs? What are the most critical actions required to tackle “gender and poverty”, in light of new obstacles and challenges, such as climate change and the impact of the global economic and financial crisis? How financing for gender equality could be strengthened in order to alleviate the gender dimensions of poverty?

III. Principal Contributions to the E-Discussion

This section presents the guiding questions for each session and summarizes key ideas and insights from the postings received. This summary is necessarily selective, given the sheer volume of material submitted, but every effort has been made to reflect the full range and nature of the ideas expressed. As indicated, all postings can be accessed at the ECOSOC website and will be distributed on Gender-net, PR-net and MDG-net.

Session 1: New Understandings of Women and Poverty

Guiding Questions

The guiding questions for the first session were as follows:

§ How has poverty and vulnerability of women changed in your country or region since 1995, when the Beijing Platform for Action was adopted? What key programmes and policies have been implemented to reduce poverty and vulnerability of women? Are there any other factors that make women more vulnerable, for example to the recent economic crisis?

Š

“We are really lacking reliable data on the situation of disabled women because most data on women does not explicitly mention the situation of disabled women; and likewise most research on the Disabled does not provide data on disabled women. If we had more differentiated data it would be easier for us to lobby governments, international development organizations, and not at last donors.”

Monika Scheffler

This first session of the E-Discussion helped to identify some good case studies, e.g. on micro-finance in Jordan, conditional cash transfers in Latin America and Egypt, where there were some useful exchanges, work on land rights in Nepal, empowerment through micro-finance linked with HIV/AIDS prevention in South Africa.

Postings in this session provided a range of materials on country-specific challenges and responses, on the strengths and limitations of conditional cash transfers (CCTs), on issues of poverty analysis and methodology, on the importance of engaging with men, and on several specific issues, including maternal mortality, violence against women, and the particular challenges facing women in Africa.

“ ... the convergence appears to be that women do not have control over resources which are necessary to liberate them from poverty.”

John Chiwuzulum Odozi

Information on Challenges and Responses in Specific Countries

Numerous postings, mainly from UNDP Country Office staff, presented specific country cases, outlining key issues and challenges faced by the country, and, in some instances, indicating the ways in which UNDP has developed responses in projects to tackle these challenges. The country-focused postings are as follows:

- Afghanistan (Moqamuddin Sera, UNDP)
- Bolivia (Mariela Padilla Callejas, Office of the Vice President)
- Cambodia (Ros Va, UNDP)
- Cote d'Ivoire (Elisabeth Assi-Aguia, NGO AICD)
- DR Congo (Chantal Ekambi, UNDP)
- Eritrea (Kifle Tekleab, UNDP)
- Ethiopia (Abebe Tesfaye, n/s)
- Fiji (Priya Chattier, UNIFEM)
- Lesotho (Puleng Letsie, Tiina Turunen and Alka Bhatia, UNDP)
- S. Sudan (Grace Okonji and Asha Arabi, UNDP)
- Togo (Flore Antonio and Justine Améyo Assilévi, UNDP)
- Turkmenistan (Nurjemal Jalilova, UNDP)
- Fiji (Carol Flore and David Abbott, UNDP Pacific Center)
- Ecuador (Verónica Quintero, UNDP)

The vulnerability of women to sharp changes in circumstances, including both the economic and food crises, and natural disasters, was highlighted in the contribution on the situation in Fiji and the Pacific Countries.

“As with similar programs in Latin America, in Ecuador conditional cash transfers are channeled through mothers. Women recognize that the transfer helps. Most state that they do not have problems in managing the resources used in their homes and they invest this money on behalf of the family, particularly to improve the food that the family eats.

It has been argued that the transfer channeled through the mother, head of household, means empowering women by allowing them greater control over the spending of the family budget. Notwithstanding the foregoing, a study is being planned about the differentiated impact that the program has into males and females. There is a risk that the transfer channeled through women, and their responsibility in complying with co-responsibility, contribute to an overload of duties and domestic responsibilities on women, reinforcing gender stereotypes.”

Some Key Issues

The problem of high maternal mortality was the subject of several postings, and was presented, by one, as a “shameful baggage on the shoulders of the international community.” It demonstrates, according to one posting, the highest level of inequity in the world: the risk of a woman dying due to a pregnancy-related cause in Africa is 1:16 compared with 1:3,500 in developed countries.

A number of postings addressed the problem of violence against women, and provided distressing examples of its impact. This issue was to emerge strongly in Session III, as discussed further below.

“I took a friend to one of our police stations to report a case of physical abuse after the husband bit her for asking him why he was cheating on her. During the fight the husband had started to biting the child as well (2yrs) that is when this friend of mine ran to my house. At the police station we were told to go back and get the husband, I raised my complaint about the matter and I heard them talk amongst themselves that I was one of those women who did not know her place. My friend was too shaken and she was disappointed in me because the protection I had promised her from the police was not forth coming so she decided to go back home and act like nothing had happened.”

Loreen Meda

Engaging with Men

Several participants stressed the importance of engagement with men.

“The issue of gender and equality has been talked about and in my opinion will continue to be talked about for the next millennium if we do not also bring man into the discussion.”

Loreen Meda

“Targeting women without involving men in active participation more often than not turns out counter development. Experience testifies to the fact that the negative input by men aroused which is not addressed naturally renders the whole effort regressive.”

Deborah Ajulu

“Engaging men in the design, implementation and delivery of programmes, for instance, is a means as well as the result of culturally sensitive approaches, and is a requirement of any development process intended to change behaviours and attitudes.”

eResponsGilMen

please provide concrete information on the objectives of these programs and, where possible, the extent to which these target or reach poor women.

§ How have the recent economic crisis affected the provision of these programmes and what changes have occurred that might affect their sustainability.

§ To what extent have these programmes helped to transform gender relations.

Synthesis of Key Responses

“We still do see instances of poverty, hunger, deprivation, domestic violence, and atrocities on women; therefore that malaise lies somewhere deep. Much needs to be done to remove corruption and deep set prejudice against women. The men need to be educated to overcome their male- ego, that empowering women in terms of owning property, income or position of power need not necessarily threaten their position; that subjugation of women is not really a symbol of authority!”

Sarah Ahmed

Information was provided on the “Oportunidades” program in Paraguay, which tackles issues relating to remittances, domestic workers, and youth employment.

“Among the most relevant activities to strengthen capacities for income generation and employment of poor and vulnerable youth are: activities to incorporate youth labor issues on the public agenda, in particular women and paid domestic workers, activities on the legislative level, activities to create productive enterprises to boost employment opportunities, activities related to the positive impact of remittances through financial products that take productive use of remittances as collateral for loans, activities aimed at reducing the causes that drive migration, allowing increased access to information for potential migrants.”

Carmen Vallejo

Poverty alleviation has been a major thrust of India’s 5-year plans, with programs tackling women’s employment, legal status, and housing. Much remains to be done to reduce women’s vulnerability, and to take measures to encourage women’s greater effective participation in community development and decision-making.

Canada’s experience of addressing women’s poverty highlighted a two-prong approach, aimed, first, at recognizing that the best way to reduce income inequality and low income is through the development of human capital, and, second, at facilitating more generous social transfers.

“Due to their primary care giving roles, [the Canadian Association of Social Workers] recognizes women’s overall participation in the labor market is experienced differently from men. CASW contends that the experience of women should be accommodated in the design of pensions and in all federal government transfer programs ... Research demonstrates, based on the European experience, women’s equality is fostered through anti-poverty strategies that reform pensions with women in mind, integrate tax and program expenditures in a progressive manner, provide flexible income benefits, and address gender inequities in the labour market.”

Darlene MacDonald

In Sudan, the importance of enabling women to access ICTs was stressed as a key component of fostering empowerment.

“I would like to suggest for poverty reduction, gender equality and women’s empowerment provision of

Three issues were at the core of more than one posting: addressing the problems of violence in the world, not least gender-based violence and FGM, tackling the problem of maternal mortality more systematically, and the need to focus on bringing women more into the decision-making process, one element of which is to strengthen engagement with men.

Gender-Based Violence

The problem of violence, and its impact on development, was the subject of several postings. Bringing this topic into policy focus was considered a critical task for leaders. As one noted, “[it] was difficult for participants (after reflecting on the gendered realities of their lives), to grasp the possibility of eradicating poverty without gender equality, and that the absence of a focus on or a link to violence against women was a major weakness. Gender-based violence is such a major factor in the daily lives of women, worldwide, that any attempts to support their efforts to ‘work their way out of poverty’ with whatever types of government or non-government programme support, without dealing with violence are not likely to be successful.” The interconnectedness of gender, violence, and development was explored extensively.

Gender Equality at the Center of the Triangle of Development, Freedom, and Peace

“While SCR1325 makes a clear demand for the inclusion of women in all aspects of security decision-making, it neither references the freshly minted MDGs nor the human security discussion and so it, too, misses a chance to articulate the necessary relationship between the promotion of human rights (with a specific emphasis on women’s rights), the achievement of peace and security for all, and the achievement of development goals.”

Vanessa Farr

“At the global inter-governmental level, the UN and its agencies need to take the policy and programmatic lead aggressively, and follow through on Kofi Annan’s 2005 statement in which he “concludes that it is only through the perfection of the “triangle of development, freedom and peace” which understands the connectedness between threats, challenges and opportunities, that the larger freedom – freedom from want, the purpose of the MDGs – will be achieved”. Gender equality and women’s empowerment (economic, political and social) sits squarely at the center of the triangle of development, freedom and peace to which Mr. Annan refers.”

Judith Wedderburn

Related to this, was the need to focus on measures to address female genital mutilation (FGM). One posting suggested that a critical response to this issue is to invest in the certification and qualification of anti-FGM experts as a means of helping to overcome this practice. According to this view, the most “critical action” now required is to get the attention of leaders and donors fo

“The common project that can bring together the interests and preoccupations of the MNCH programs, as well as those of sector managers and health care providers, is that of universal access to care for mothers and children, embedded within an overall strategy of universal access for the whole population.”

Rita Luthra

“The MDG5 indicator on maternal mortality is the worst performing indicator among the MDGs.

“At this stage we need leaders who are prepared to show moral leadership and integrity; who can demonstrate a commitment to the most marginalized among their population; who can lead their populations in the direction of greater solidarity with the peoples outside of their borders; and who can balance national responsibilities with the development imperatives of populations around the world.”

Bani Dugal

Other key messages included a reminder of the centrality of education, which should be “compulsory and free,” according to one participant, and that it was essential to focus on water and sanitation, on supporting civil society work, and strengthening accountability mechanisms.

“Among the specific commitments that I propose that we seek towards 2015 are:

- § Addressing the provision of water and sanitation as a priority to support, enhance and undergird the struggle for gender equality and women's empowerment. A discussion on the link of water and sanitation and the MDGs and in particular MDG 3, and strategies to bring this as a key aspect of the work of the international women's movement is needed and can perhaps be part of the agenda of CSW and CSD [Commission on Sustainable Development].
- § Supporting with resources (financial and technical) the work of civil society organizations, especially women's and community based organizations that are committed to the agenda for gender equality and women's empowerment. For example, the work and reach of the United Nations Democracy Fund (UNDEF).
- § Focusing on agreed accountability systems that will support the achievements of the MDGs targets and focusing on these through the work of UN Agencies in the respective countries.”

Linnette Vassell

The importance of focusing on rural areas, and on the wide range of needs of rural populations, was stressed.

“The following might be the most relevant commitments and appropriate to achieve the MDGs:

- § Free and compulsory primary education for the girls.
- § Making the women of all ages literate must be mandatory.
- § Earmarking special budgetary provisions for delivering services and facilities to women in rural areas for reproductive and sexual health.
- § Campaipriaacy(mpu(a)-5.5ld(a)-5.5sing)-5.7)(α)-5.w(m)-2.(e9SI5.5(tre amoSI5.5(n(t)0.ing)-5.7)(lth).5(t7 ru).5(rα)-5.l/unth

“One of the key recommendations has to be insisting on sex-disaggregated data in every ministry, department, private sector and non-governmental organizations (NGO). We need targets and measures for all recommendations. Even when policy will is great as it is in Rwanda, if you cannot track what is happening to girls and women, boys and men, you miss out on key information that will lead to effective policy development.”

Shirley Randell

“In our aid coordination, we need to re-direct some of the funding to training in the use of data. While billions have been spent on conducting official surveys and censuses (which are often analysed by international experts outside the survey country), not one tenth of one percent of these amounts have been directed toward training in-country analysts in women’s ministries and networks. Yet such training is feasible, and far less costly than the surveys, which lie on shelves and gather dust while advocates lack materials and mentors to put these data to work. In-country, practical training in data use, that is action- and policy-linked, is an affordable kind of technical assistance for agencies like UNDP and bilateral donors, and such project funding has a disproportionately large impact potential. Learning to use our own data and exploring the results we can achieve is exciting and empowering.”

Patricia Alexander

The Association for Women’s Rights in Development (AWID) shared an extensive set of recommendations for future action with E-Discussion participants. It outlined a 5-part program encompassing: a) rethinking development goals and gender equality in a crisis context; b) the need for a rights-based approach perspective to 'invest in women'; c) a stronger UN policy and operational role on economic development and gender equality; d) moving from aid effectiveness to inclusive and sustainable development.

Key Action Areas

We summarize below the key action areas identified by participants in the E-Discussion, as presented in the preceding section.

Reduce Violence

- § Establish strong links between violence, including armed violence, and development and impoverishment, and how such violence specifically undermines advancement towards women's empowerment and gender equality; and commit to mitigating this complex development problem.
- § Take policy and programmatic lead at the global inter-governmental level, and follow through on Kofi Annan's 2005 statement in which he "concludes that it is only through the perfection of the "triangle of development, freedom and peace." Gender equality and women's empowerment sit squarely at the center of this triangle.

Improve Maternal Health

- § Strengthen health delivery systems to significantly reduce maternal mortality rates. UN Member States need to confront this issue squarely so that lives are saved rather than lost. The common project is that of universal access to care for mothers and children, embedded within an overall strategy of universal access for the whole population. Earmark special budgetary provisions for delivering services and facilities to women in rural areas for reproductive and sexual health.

Improve Labor Market Outcomes and Economic Opportunity for Women

- § Enhance targeted, combined and treated labour market measures within a wider social exclusion context in order to have significant positive impact on the position on the most vulnerable men and women.
- § Invest in vocational programmes, functional literacy, subsidies for employment; establish a non-discriminatory institutional framework in the area of labor, and develop flexible forms of work.
- § Address the right of women to land tenure, property and inheritance.

Strengthen Accountability to Women

- § Fulfill the commitments to gender equality made by UN member States view the view to promote sustainable economic and social development.

- § Support, with financial and technical resources, the work of civil society organizations, especially women's and community based organizations that are committed to the agenda for gender equality and women's empowerment.
- § Focus on agreed accountability systems that will support the achievements of the MDGs targets and focusing on these through the work of UN Agencies in the respective countries.

Build In-Country Capacity to Generate and Use Sex-Disaggregated Data

- § Insist collection, analysis and use of sex-disaggregated data in every ministry, department, private sector and non-governmental organizations (NGO). Develop targets and measures for all recommendations.
- § Direct funding to training in the use of data. In-country, practical training in data use, that is action- and policy-linked, is an affordable kind of technical assistance for agencies like UNDP and bilateral donors, and such project funding has a disproportionately large impact potential. Learning to use our own data and exploring the results we can achieve is exciting and empowering.

Prioritize Water and Sanitation

- § Address the provision of water and sanitation as a priority to support, enhance and undergird the struggle for gender equality and women's empowerment. A discussion on the link of water and sanitation and the MDGs, and in particular MDG 3, and

Annex 2: Session-Specific Launch Messages and Guiding Questions

Session I:

On behalf of Winnie Byanyima, Director of the UNDP Gender Team, and Nikhil Seth, Director of the UNDESA Office for ECOSOC Support and Coordination, I welcome you to the 2010 e-discussion on Women and Poverty. 2010 will be a watershed year for the promotion of gender equality and women's empowerment with a number of high level global events taking place (see below). Rarely has so much international attention been concentrated on gender equality and women's empowerment. The objective of this e-discussion is to enable you to have your voices heard in these fora. We will share the conclusions and recommendations of this e-discussion with the organizers of these events. Finally, we will compile and analyze the experiences and resources shared and send them back to you for your reference.

I hope we can seize the moment to come up with new ideas, critical policy messages, and an action agenda for the 2010 global events that will carry us to 2015. To achieve this objective, the e-discussion focuses on three particular topics: Women and Poverty: Trends and New Insights; Institutional Leverage: Sustaining Progress; and Action Agenda: Policies for 2015. We're also open to any additional ideas that can help make the e-discussion more interactive and valuable to you.

To kick off the discussion I am inviting you to reflect on the following set of questions:

* How has poverty and vulnerability of women changed in your country or region since 1995, when the Beijing Platform for Action was adopted? What key programmes and policies have been implemented to reduce poverty and vulnerability of women? Are there any other factors that make women more vulnerable, for example to the recent economic crisis?

* In your country or region, is poverty, hunger and employment data (MDG 1 targets) disaggregated by sex? Is it widely available and analyzed (e.g. from household surveys, administrative data, censuses and other sources)? What needs to be done to improve the availability of this data and gender analysis of poverty?

* Is this data and analysis used to inform public policies? Does the civil society use it to advocate for or to monitor these policies? Please give concrete examples. What needs to be done to improve the use of this data and analysis in policy-making?

Please help us bring new thinking and new ideas to the policy debate about poverty reduction, gender equality and women's empowerment, drawing on experience with implementing the Beijing Platform for Action and the Millennium Development Goals. Share your innovative ideas, research and good practice examples with policy-makers, researchers, and practitioners around the world, and help make a difference in the fight for gender equality and eradication of poverty.

I am delighted to introduce Mr. Mark Blackden who will act as our guest moderator for the e-discussion. Mark is an independent consultant, with years of experience working on

Launch of Second Phase

... We're going to move to the second phase of our e-discussion, in which we want to address specific institutional responses to poverty. We want to build on the conversation we have started on conditional cash transfers, by looking at social security and social assistance programs, as one important mechanism for tackling poverty, as several of your postings have already suggested in the first phase.

We know from ILO and other data that very few people benefit from adequate social security, while half of the world's population lives without any social security protection. Social protection is provided through various instruments such as cash transfers, pensions, child care, social services, and various subsidies.

Here are the set of question for this week:

- * What kind of social assistance/benefits and protection programs (such as cash transfers or other social

Gender, Land Rights, and HIV

From Fried and Patel

Recent research from South Asia has documented the link between women's property ownership and a substantially lower risk of marital violence. In fact, asset control gives women greater bargaining power within households and helps protect against domestic violence, a key risk factor for HIV. Research in Kerala, India, for example, found that 49% of women with no property reported physical violence as compared to only 7% of women who did own property (ICRW, UNDP, GCWA, "Women's Property Rights as an AIDS Response Emerging Efforts in South Asia," 2007). Land/property rights can provide women with a secure place to live, a site for economic activity and means of livelihood. Property and inheritance rights also reduce economic dependence on men and extended families, and provide collateral for credit. They can help women and girls to avoid being drawn into livelihoods that place them at greater risk of infection.

From Fried and Pradichit

One successful project linking microfinance, women's empowerment/anti-violence programming and community mobilization in a group-based lending format to prevent HIV in a community is the Microfinance for AIDS and Gender Equity (IMAGE) study in South Africa (Pronyk, 2005).

In Asia, for example, UNDP has actively supported the development of the Women and Wealth Project (WWP), in partnership with Population and Community Development Association (PDA), an NGO based in Bangkok. This regional pilot initiative pursues the socioeconomic empowerment of women living with and affected by HIV through development of small-scale social enterprises in Cambodia and India.

Time Use and Care Tasks

From Antonopoulos

A consortium of researchers from 10 countries are in the process of developing the work plan in the next few months and we hope that we will be able to demonstrate why a geographic mapping across the three domains (income, public spending and time) must become the main tool, if we are to make transparent what has remained invisible in poverty counts.

Poverty Analysis

From Alexander

Are women “poorer” than men within the same household? Two women researchers have demonstrated, using Tajikistan data, that household survey data can show the differences in poverty levels of men, women and children, given women’s lower wage earnings, if we have any evidence of differential “income pooling” behaviour between women and men in a country or region – even if all the farm income cannot be analysed individually. (Income pooling behaviour is the extent to which individuals share their individual earnings with all the household members. Saving Newborn Lives and Engenderhealth), the "Road Map" is aimed at accelerating the reduction of maternal and newborn mortality and the attainment of the MDGs in Africa. The Ministers of Health of 46 countries adopted this strategy in 2004 and committed to increasing investment to maternal and newborn health and scaling up interventions to reducing maternal and newborn morbidity and mortality through a strengthened health systems.

UNDP Serbia is currently supporting study to map the most vulnerable groups at the labor market and investigate the impact of economic crisis on their position with the aim to provide recommendations on the measures for improvement, taking into account a wider perspective of their social exclusion.

The study was conducted in 2009 by leading Serbian economic think tank, Foundation for Advancement of Economics (FREN). In the final stage of research, results were presented to Government representatives on 11th February 2010 with the aim to incorporate their comments in final study recommendations. Representatives of the Ministry of Labor and Social Policy, Ministry of Economy and Regional Development, National Employment Service, Gender Equality Directorate, Social Inclusion and Poverty Reduction Unit of the Deputy Prime Minister's Office, ILO and UNDP participated in the discussion.
