India is characterized by a very stark digital divide and it is necessary to address that if digital education has to be taken to every adolescent irrespective of location, social status

- We would like to recommend that free and compulsory education should be made available for children aged 6-18 years, especially for girls given that dropout rates are increasing post COVID years. At the time of enrolment in secondary schools, authorities consider setting up career counseling facilities or events, so that adolescents can wisely decide and choose their profession or career later in life.
- Youth should be recognised as a diverse category and recognise intersectional identities. various kinds of marginality in terms of class, caste, sexuality, ability, religion, location, etc.
- There is an urgent need to disaggregate the data about marginalized youth. Without specific budgets allocated for disaggregated sections of marginalized communities, policies will remain stagnant as advisory documents.
